Negro Newsmen Here To Honor Ralph McGill

Associated Press

Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, will be given the 1964 journalism service award June 13 by the Capital Press Club, a predominantly Negro organization.

The club also announced yesterday that distinguished service awards will be given to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, Carl T. Rowan, director of the U.S. Information Service and union leader A. Philip Randolph, who headed the civil rights march on Washington last summer.

CBS commentator Walter Cronkite will receive the 1964 journalism excellence award, with author James Baldwin receiving the 1964 journalism achievement award.

Other awards will go to actor Sidney Poitier, the performers and producers of the CBS television series "East Side, West Side," Ruby Hurley, southeast region director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and to the Continental Society of Washington for its service to Junior Village.
